

JOHN BRAXTON, a student at Swarthmore College, reads a pamphlet on the Vietnam war at the home of University of Pennsylvania professor, Dr. Nicholas Muhlenberg, on Harvard av. in Swarthmore.

'Helping Heal War Wounds,' Says Youth Joining Phoenix

wounds," said 18-year-old John spending the summer. Braxton, a Swarthmore College Botany and Sociology student.

Phoenix next month when it is 19 in October. He will return expected to make its second to Swarthmore in the fall as a voyage to Haiphong with med-sophomore. He said his interical supplies for the North Viet- ests are botany and sociology.

He spoke his convictions at the home of Dr. Nicholas Muhlenberg, professor of regional planning in the Fine Arts School at the University of

"I can't stop the war by my-Pennsylvania, at 405 Harvard self, but I can help heal its av., Swarthmore, where he is

Six feet, broad-shouldered and he will join the crew of the bespectacled, Braxton will be

During the summer he has

He will leave Philadelphia Friday to fly to Alaska, then to Tokyo, then to Hiroshima. There he will join the Philadelphia-based Quaker group which last March defied the U.S. Government and sailed a 50-foot ketch to North Vietnam with $10,000 worth of medical supplies.

Against the War

"I am going," Braxton said, "because I am very much against the war in Vietnam, I think the U. S. got involved in a war in which it has no business, and which it can't win in what we consider the traditional sense of winning.

"We are really fighting the popular or nationalist movement, not an aggression.

"I want to make it clear that I'm not solely against the U.S. North Vietnam has definitely been a contributing party.

"I'm going in order to make it clear to Americans how strongly I feel, and that I don't recognize our Government's idea of who the enemy is. We are bombing men, women, boys and girls, when the enemy is